

ENGLISH 102: INQUIRY INTO IMMIGRATION AND ETHNICITY IN AMERICA
Laura Samal

At some point in time, someone in our families left a home far away and came to America. Every one of us has a family immigration story, whether we know the story or not. All of us all are descendents of immigrants who came either by choice or by force. There is no greater issue impacting the U.S. today than immigration. The flow of immigrants and changes in demographics influence the languages we speak, the foods we eat, the jobs we take, schools, and medical care. In this course we will inquire into the history of immigration in America, and how it has shaped our national identity. We will trace the story of our own family's immigration, as well as those of other ethnic groups. We will also explore the role America should play in relationship to immigrants and attempt to develop our own position on American immigration policy.
